HEADBANGERS HEAVEN:

May 30, 1996 – Leon Redbone (born Dickran Gobalian), dies of complications from dementia in Pennsylvania. He was 69. In true Redbone fashion, his obituary listed his age as 127. A fixture on the folk music festival circuit in the 70's, Redbone went on to become a fixture on Saturday Night Live, Sesame Street and other TV programs with his mixture of music reflecting Tin Pan Alley, vaudeville, jazz and ragtime influences. He was revered by musicians ranging from Bob Dylan to Jack White. One of his later works was recording "Baby, It's Cold Outside" for the Elf soundtrack, along with voicing the animated character of Leon the Snowman.

May 30, 1996 – John Kahn, bassist for The Jerry Garcia Band, dies of a heart attack. He was 48. Kahn was also an occasional collaborator with the Grateful Dead and an in-demand session musician. As a child, one of his babysitters was Marilyn Monroe.

May 30, 1980 – Carl Radle, bassist of Derek and the Dominos, dies of a kidney infection aggravated by the effects of alcohol and narcotics. He was 37. Radle worked on all of Clapton's solo projects in the 70's, and was a session musician who worked with Joe Cocker, Leon Russell, Dave Mason, Buddy Guy, George Harrison, the Band and many others.
